

Jenny Hua

28 November 2018

What A 'Woman of Tomorrow' Means to Me

To me, "Women of Tomorrow" are women who speak their truth, push and set boundaries, and are empowered to be who they want to be. They not only defy and challenge society's stereotypes and standards, but they also encourage others to embrace their dreams and make their own mark. A "Woman of Tomorrow" will inspire young women to explore situations outside of their comfort zone and find their passions. They engage in their community and aid in creating a network of individuals and organizations to foster not only connections but also inspiration for women and girls all around the world to break barriers that women in the past have not.

"Women of Tomorrow" are people who live ahead of their time and try to push society forward in all aspects. Whether it be economically, socially, or culturally, these women will always try and to think ahead and make the future easier for mankind. A "woman of tomorrow" thinks outside the box and strives for greatness. They are not afraid to bring up issues regarding women rights and aid in creating events, organizations, legislation, and resources in order to bring improvements in the lives of women and girls and close to gap between genders.

Strong women are those who have learned that standing, supporting, and appreciating the strengths of one another can be the most beneficial to society. Together, women can change the world for the better.

I (Jenny Hua) affirm that this essay was written by me and represents my own original work.

A handwritten signature in black ink, appearing to read 'Jenny Hua', with a long horizontal line extending to the right.